

Respect on Remembrance Day

Remembrance Day is the day to remember those who fought in war, those who died and those who survived. We need to appreciate those who survived the things no human should have to witness.

We must respect those who lost their lives in battle. They all had families. It must've been hard for them to tell their families they're leaving. They fought for their country. Some people don't like what they did and judge them when they don't know what they went through.

I am thankful for what those who were sent out to war did for Canada, and I think everyone should be. They don't deserve to be judged because they went to war for their country. In my opinion, people have no reason to judge what the soldiers went through. They are all my heroes.

My great grandfather was in the Korean War. He survived and sometimes he still has nightmares about it. He never talks about it... he doesn't like thinking about it either. But he is proud of having served.
